Release Date: 2002
Country of origin: USA
Format: 16:9
Notes: A deluxe DVD edition of the movie, Legend. Disc 1 is the director's cut of the movie. Disc 2 includes bonus features, such as the making of, Tangerine Dream score, lost scenes, storyboards, photo gallery, trailers, bios, and the Bryan Ferry promo video for the song Is Your Love Strong Enough featuring David Gilmour on guitar. There are at least four different versions of this picture: the original European release (94 min.), the American theatrical release (89 min.), a network TV version (94 min.) and a director's cut (113 min.). Ridley Scott's first cut ran 150 minutes and had a music score by composer Jerry Goldsmith; after an unsuccessful test, the film was re-edited twice and shortened to 113 minutes and finally to 94-minutes. This version removed part of Goldsmith's score, replacing some new music by composer Tim Souster and a few cues from Jerry Goldsmith's score for "Psycho II". Thereafter much of the footage has been lost. Before the American release, the film was re-edited once more because Universal president Sid Sheinberg felt the European version was unappealing to young American audiences, and the score was replaced with new compositions by the band Tangerine Dream, plus a song by Jon Anderson and a Brian Ferry song was added over the end credits).
